With a population of 40 million, vast hydrocarbon reserves and its proximity to Europe, Algeria has significant economic development potential, but its future outlook is subject to great uncertainties. In addition to the COVID-19 pandemic, Algeria will have to deal with large macroeconomic imbalances.

After a recession of 5% in 2020, the economy should post a modest rebound in 2021 (3.5%) before to decelerate again due to the necessity of consolidating public finances and external accounts. Algeria is fundamentally a state-driven economy that runs large twin deficits. The rebound in global oil prices will thus provide a short-term respite but this will not be sufficient to restore macroeconomic stability.

The fragile socio-political context since the resignation of former President Bouteflika compounds these difficulties. Negligible external debt gives some room for manoeuvre, however, even if the rapid erosion of FX reserves is a source of concern. Furthermore, macroeconomic challenges have pushed the authorities to change their attitude towards foreign investors. Several reforms have been introduced since the beginning of 2020 with a view to improve the country's attractiveness, in particular in the oil and gas sector as many years of under-investment and robust domestic energy consumption have affected the country's ability to export hydrocarbon products.

Market overview

Algeria is largely a cash-based economy. Payment card penetration rate is low but rising as consumers become more comfortable using cards as a payment method. For example, in Q1 2021, there were 1,782,213 internet transactions carried out by CIB and Edahabia cards, a 340.65% increase on the same period 2020. Value rose from DZD 634 million to DZD 2.2 billion.

The government is keen to encourage the use of electronic payments and as such in September 2020, made the use of all electronic payments free of charge. As of 31 December 2020, all merchants were required to set up infrastructure to enable cashless transactions. Merchants without the means to receive electronic payments are required to set up a remote payment service, i.e. the TPE QR Code, by end-2021.

Limited electronic banking services are available from some banks. These services are primarily used by larger companies. There is no national electronic banking system in Algeria, so companies use banks' proprietary services.

Limited online and mobile banking services are provided by the country's leading banks. The use of digital financial services is low: 16% of adults use digital payments.
